MRS. JOHN DREW DEAD.

THE AGED ACTRESS PASSES AWAY AT LARCHMONT-HER STAGE CAREER OF SEVENTY-ONE YEARS.

Mrs. John Drew, the actress, died at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the Bevan House, in Larch-gont. She had been unconscious for three hours. gent-ster death was due to heart disease, complicated by kidney complaint. She had been suffering for by wall years, but not seriously until last May or Then she began to complain of increase in her troubles. With the coming of hot weather she began to fall, and for a time sank rapidly. the troubles were checked for a time, but recently became apparent that she could not long surrive. In the last few days the hope was that she would live until her son, John Drew, could reach on Monday Mrs. Drew seemed much better than for several days preceding, and hopes were entertained by her friends that the rally would continue for some days, although it was known to all that it was but temporary; that before long she must begin to sink, and that when the end appreached it would come rapidly. Yesterday morning she seemed in good spirits and chatted with those about her. She had a long and pleasant talk with her grandson, "Jack" Barrymore. When he left her bedside he said that his grandmother appeared much better, Dr. C. W. Jackson did not take this view of the case, and announced that it was only a question of hours when the end would come. The last person to talk with Mrs. Drew was Mrs. John Bevan, the wife of the proprietor of the hotel. They chatted for a few minutes, and Mrs. Drew spoke of the beauty of the scene in the clubbouse a short time ago, on the occasion of a visit Mrs. Drew made to it to witness cotillon. She reverted to this experience many times in the course of her sickness, and it was the last thing that she spoke of. Her last words were about it to Mrs. Bevan. Then she fell into what it was at first hoped was a natural sleep. Dr. Jackson saw her again, however, and de-clared that it was unlikely that she would again clared that it was unlikely that the would again revive. She lay unconscious until about 2:53, when she was taken with a convulsion, and this lasted until the end came at 3 o'clock.

At the bedside at the time of Mrs. Drew's death were John Barrymore, her grandscn; Mrs. C. J. Stewald and her two daughters, Mrs. Bevan and Dr. Jackson. Dispatches were sent at once to all the friends of the dead woman and to her son, John Drew, who was to close his engagement at Salt Lake City last evening and hurry to his mother's side. Dispatches were also sent to Mrs. John Draw, who is in Europe superintending the education of her daughter, and to Miss Ethel Barrymore, who sailed not long since to join Sir Henry Irving's company. Mrs. John Drew is expected to sall on the first steamer for home. John Drew is sald to have left Salt Lake City last night.

The death of Mrs. Drew cast a gloom over the hotel. During her sickness Mrs. Drew had been the friend of all the guests, and all inquired daily as to her health. Every one seemed to take a great interest in her, and her death was felt by all. At dinner last night the sole topic of conversation that could be sustained for any length of time vas the life and death of Mrs. Drew. The body was embalmed and removed from the tel to the vestry-room of St. John's Methodist Episcopal Church, where it will rest until the arrival of John Drew.

MRS. DREW'S LONG STAGE LIFE.

Mrs. John Drew's maiden name was Louisa Lane. Her parents were Thomas and Eliza Lane. Both were actors, and her mother was a singer as well. Louisa was born in London, on January 10, 1820. She appeared on the stage as a baby, as most actors' babies used to do in those days, and her actual playing of parts dates from her appearance as Agib in "Timour the Tartar" in Liverpool when she was "ix years old. A year later she was brought to America by her mother, her father having died. Her mother had an engagement as a member of the stock company at the Walnut Street Theatre, in Philadelphia, and there Louisa made her first American appearance, as the Duke of York in "King Richard III," Junius Brutus Booth

It was only a little later, on March 28, 1828, that she was seen for the first time in New-York, at e Bowery Theatre, as Little Pickle. The fashion of child actors, which comes up now and then, was in full force just at that time, and Louisa soon played engagements at the rremont Theatre, in sion, and at the Baltimore Theatre, in Balti-re. At the latter place she appeared as Albert "William Tell," with Edwin Forrest as Tell. Forrest was so much pleased with her that he gave her a medal, which she kept and was proud of as long as she lived. Somebody asked her a few years ago how she found time to go to school, and she replied that she never went to school, but got all her education by reading and by associating with clever people.

She went back to the Walnut Street Theatre, January 5, 1829, appeared in a play called Twelve Precisely; or, a Night at Dover," which had been written for her. In this she played five parts, the supposed ages of the characters ranging from two to thirty-one years. In 1833 she joined the company of the Bowery Theatre. It was at about this time that her mother was married to John Kimball, a stage manager. With her mother and her step-father she went to Jamaica, where Mr. Kimbali died from yellow fever. Mrs. Kimball and her daughter then came back to New-York, just in time to encounter an epidemic of cholera.

But this also they escaped. Not long after her return from Jamaica she was married to Henry B. Hunt, an English singer, from whom she was afterward separated. Not long after the separation from her first husband she was married to George Mossop, an Irish

MANY PARTS IN MANY PLAYS.

She returned to the Walnut Street Theatre and played leading juvenile parts for a time. There she supported Edwin Forrest in several plays, acting, for instance, Julio de Mortimer, in "Richelieu"; Ophelia, Desdemona, and Pauline in "The Ludy of Lyons." Here, also, she supported Joseph Jefferson, John E. Owen and many of the other stars of that day, and played fairly well through the whole range of the drama, as the necessity was for actors in stock companies. In the course of the next few years she played Lady Macbeth, Lady Tenzie. Rosina, in "The Barber of Seville"; Lucille, in "The Story of a Hunt"; Susanna, in "The Ladder of Love," and many other parts which right be mentioned in further illustration of versatility, natural or enforced. She supported the elder Booth frequently, and later Macready and Edwin Booth. In the season of 1841-42 she was at the Chestnut Street Theatre, in Philadelphia, in the tompany with Peter Richings, whom she regarded as one the best actors of his day. In 1842 she was again in New-York, playing at the Park Theatre, her first appearance there being in "Blanche Heriot, or the Chertsey Curfew." It was in 1850 that she met John Drew. They war both at that time members of a stock company in Albany, of which Charles W. Couldock was the leading man. They were married, and soon afterward went to Philadelphia, where they en gaged for the stock company at the Chestnut Street Theatre. There they both appeared on August 28, 1852, in Colley Cibber's "She Would and She Would John Drew was an extremely clever actor and soon became exceedingly popular.

The next year Mr. Drew became ambitious to manage a theatre, and he and William Wheatley, another young actor, formed a partnership and got lease of the Arch Street Theatre. They opened ton August 20, 1853, with Bulwer's "Money." Mrs. non August 20, 1852, with Bulwer's "Money, Mrs. Drew did not act there till December 19, of the same year, when she played Constance, in "The Love Chase." In the course of that season she appeared as Jane Shore, Beatrice, in "Much Ado About Nothing": Lady Volatile, in "Paris and London": Widow Cheseley, Mrs. Oakley, in "The Jealous Wife," and other active control of the control ous Wife," and other parts.

Mr. Drew remained at the Chestnut Street Theafte for only a short time, and then made a staring tour in England and Ireland. On his return he was the manager for a short time of the National Theatre, in Philadelphia, and made a moduction of "The Nailad Queen," in May, 1857, with a remarkable cast, including George Boniface, Joseph Jefferson, Mary Devlin and Edwin Adams. But it was a failure, in spite of its cast. For the season beginning in the autumn of 1857 Mr. and Mra Drey joined the stock company of the Walnut Street Theatre, under the management of Mrs. D. P. Bowers. They remained there for a year, and D.P. Bowers. They remained there for a year, and had a farewell benefit in November, 1855, after which Mr. Drew went to California and Australia.

MRS. DREW AS A MANAGER.

in 186; the Arch Street Theatre was in want of manager, and Mrs. Drew took charge of the bouse, and Mrs. Drew took charge of the bouse, and directed its fortunes for over thirty lears. Her husband returned from Australia in and began an engagement at the Arch Street er her management on January 13 of that year last approximately till May 3, when he made appearance. He was soon afterward taken sick, and he died on May 21, being thirtyfive years old. The children of Mr. and Mrs. John Drew were John and Sidney, both well-known actors at present, and Georgie, who was married to Maurice Barrymore, and died at Santa Barbara. Cal., on July 2, 1893. She was also an excellen and a favorite actress. Her daughter, Ethel Bar-

Cal., on July 2, 1833. She was also an excellent and a favorite actress. Her daughter, Ethel Barrymore, went on the stage a short time ago. She went to England early this summer to support William Gillette in "Secret Service," and she is now a member of Henry Irving's company.

When stock companies went out of fashion the Arch Street Theatre had to follow the methods pursued by most other theatres, and became what is known as a caribination house. Mrs. Drew continued to manage it, and frequently p yed in it.

It is as Mrs. Malaprop that Mrs. Drew is best known to the present generation of theatre-goers, and it is in that character, no doubt, that she will be best remembered, as long as she is remembered at all. No other actress has played it with Joseph Jefferson in many years, and no other production of the play as important as his has been given in several years. Mrs. Drew played the part when Jefferson and William J. Florence were together as stars, and she continued to play it after Florence's death. So constantly, indeed, had Mrs. Drew been occupied of late years with this one part that she had, no doubt, many warm admirers who never saw her in any other. But it was a privilege to see and to study even this one. Those who never saw her in any other. But it was a privilege to see and to study even this one. Those who never way, the full meaning of them, unfortunately, may never be able to understand in any other way, the full meaning of old comedy. It was one of the most finished and delightful stage performances of the time. Mrs. Drew realized and expressed the character of Mrs. Malaprop with a stately dignity of oldtime manner, a screnc placidity of self-satished ignorance, a grace of action and a calm precision of comically entangled speech, that amounted as nearly to perfection as any stage performance can. She also devised and suggested many of the bits of stage business in connection with it, that added so much to the force of the part and the enjoyableness of the performance. Those who saw her play i them again.

THE WORK OF HER LAST YEARS.

Yet Mrs. Malaprop was by no means the only part that Mrs. Drew played in recent years. It was not even the last part that she played. She acted for a time with Miss Julia Marlowe, in "The Love Chase," and she played a short engagement not even the last part that she played. She acted for a time with Miss Julia Marlowe, in "The Love Chase," and she played a short engagement at the Standard Theatre, in this city, in 1892, appearing as Mrs. Gillibrand in Sydney Grundy's "The Arabian Nights." The following season she made a starring tour in a company of which her son Sidney and his wife were members, and she appeared as the Widow Warren in "The Read to Ruin" and as Mrs. Oukley in "The Jenious Wife." This company also played "The Rivals" and "The Love Chase." The company appeared in this city at the Fourteenth Street Theatre, the Star and the Harlem Opera House.

On May 31, 1855, a benefit was given at the Fifth Avenue Theatre to Charles W. Couldock, and "The Rivals" was presented, with a remarkable cast. Mrs. Drew played Mrs. Malaprop and the other actors were Joseph Jefferson, Thomas W. Keene, William H. Crane, Nat C. Goodwin, Thomas Q. Seabrooke, De Wolf Hopper, Henry Miller, Miss Viola Allen and Miss Nelle McHenry. This achievement suggested the possibility of giving a number of performances of the play, with a similar cast, in various cities, and such a plan was carried out in the spring of 1895. The cast then included Mrs. Drew as Mrs. Malaprop, Joseph Jefferson as Rob Aeres, William H. Crane as Sir Anthony Absolute, Nat C. CHOOSING A CANDIDATE FOR SENATOR

IN SOUTH CAROLINA. [BY TELEGRAPH TO THE TRIBUNE.] Columbia, S. C., Aug. 31.—At midnight all the indications are that John L. McLaurin, who is now serving in the Senate as the Governor's appointed has been elected by the Democratic primary to fill the five years of the unexpired term of the late Senator Earle The campaign has been a hot one so far as the personalities between candidates went, but the public has taken little interest in it. McLaurin bore the brunt of the fighting, being continually or the defensive from attacks by ex-Senator irby and ex-Governor Evans, his opponents. Irby retired voluntarily last year, as he was satisfied that Tillman would knife him, but this time, after making friends with the Senator, he considered his chances good against McLaurin on account of the latter's tariff views. Evans was hopeful of vindi-cation, having been defeated last year because of charges of dishonesty, which he now believed his former friends thought false, actauria, while a reformer, had the support of the anti-Tillman people, because he has been free from bitterness and liberal in his views. His record is clean, and he is considered able.

The vote to-day was one of the lightest in years The results as indicated at midnight are surprising even to sanguine McLaurin advocates. Probably half the votes polled have been reported. McLau-rin's majority is about 11,000 in a vote of nearly 30,000. The districts heard from include the home

A JAPANESE BANKER'S VISIT.

MR. KAWAI VISITS VARIOUS WALL STREET IN-STITUTIONS.

Tatsutaro Kawai, chief secretary of the Fifteenth Bank, Limited, of Tokio, Japan, who is making a tour of the United States and Europe to enlarge his knowledge of banking, paid a visit yesterday to the United States Sub-Treasury, the New-York Clearing House, the Fourth National Bank and the Chamber of Commerce. The Fifteenth Bank is the second largest bank in Japan, or in other words it stands next to the Bank of Japan. It has a capital of 18,600,000 yen (sliver) and a reserve fund of 4,500,-90 yen. Mr. Kawai made the following statement:

"Thirty years ago, when our nation was first pened to foreign nations, the state of our nation was such that the traders or the industrial men were despised as the lowest and basest class of society, and the warrior class considered it a shame and a disgrace to be ranked equally with them Under such conditions those economical ideas of the present day were hardly thought of in their minds, nor even pictured in their fancies. But when the intercourse with foreign nations became more and more extensive, and things abroad were brought to light by degrees, it was at last known to our nation that politics and trade must be inseparably carried on for national development. By this time it was first brought to the notice of the business world that banking institutions must be established as commercial organs. In the mean time a law was passed in the sixth year of Melji (1873) for regulating national banks. They were authorized on the security of government bonds to issue bank notes, which they

Columbia, with about the same vote, gave nim 690 majority. Ithy made a surprisingly poor run, having received only 10 per cent of the vote cast. While some of the country precincts yet to be heard from are supposed to favor Evans. McLaurin's majority will not be less than 10.00, and may be much greater.

Senator Tillman has remained quiet in the campaign, but is supposed to have been favorably disposed toward McLaurin. Evans's defeat will relire bim permanently from politics.

MARRIED ON A THEATRE TRIP.

TARRYTOWN LOVERS SETTLE THE OPPOSITION TO THEIR UNION BY A SECRET WED

DING IN NEW-YORK.

The announcement yesterday of the marriage Miss Gratia H. Cannon, of Irvington-on-the-Hud-son, and Frederick W. Smith, of Tarrytown, caused much surprise and comment in the social circles of the two villages. The marriage occurred on the evening of June 25, in the rectory of the Church of the Transfiguration (the Little Church Around the Corner), and the ceremony was performed by the Cornery, and the ceremony was personned, the Rev. Dr. Houghton. It was kept a secret, however, until a short time are, when Mess Cannon informed her parents, and they caused the announcement to be made. The parents of both were not altogether opposed to the match, but they held different views as to the form of marriage, and also objected to the ceremony taking place at present research of the youth of the teatr.

held different views as to the form of marriage, and also objected to the ceremony taking place at present on account of the youth of the pair.

Mrs. Smith is only nineteen years old, while her husband is just twenty-one. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry H. Cannon, who live in a handsome mansion adjoining the Casho, at Ardsley on the Hudson. Mr. Cannon is president of the village or Irvington, and the family is prominent in society there, and is well-known in this city. Mr. Smith is the son of James W. Smith, of Wendle Park, Tarrytown, and a member of the firm of Smith, Kerr & Co., coal merchants, of that village. The young people first met about three years ago and they have since been almost constantly together. They wanted to be married het fall, but their parents refused to consent. Young Smith became despondent, and one day went to a drugstore in Tarrytown and bought a quantity of carbolic acid. A few hours later on the same day he was discovered bying anconscious in his father's coal yard, with the empty carboids acid bottle beside him. With medical aid he recovered.

It became apparent to the parents some time ago that it was only a question of time when the marriage would take place, and they then turned their efforts toward postponing the date as long as possible. The Cannons are Episcopal ans, and attend St. Barnabas's Episcopal Church, of which the Roy. Dr. William H. Benjamin is rector. The Smiths belong to the Catholic Apostodic Church, in West Fifty-seventh-st. If the marriage was to take place, and they then turned their country to the parents toward postponing the date as long as possible. MORE WITNESSES AGAINST LUETGERT. Chicago, Aug. 31.—Three witnesses were placed on the stand by the prosecution in the Luetgert trial to-day. One was Frank Bialk, night watchman at the Lu-tgert sausage factory and a trusted employe of the defendant, for whom he worked several years. His testimony bore directly on the movements of Luetgert during the night of May 1. He also related how two barrels, which it is alleged contained caustic potash, were stored on one of the upper floors of the factory and were, shortly of the upper floors of the factory and were, shortly before May I, taken to the basement, where their contents were empthed into the vat and dissolved by steam. Mrs. Agatha Tosch, the wife of a subonkeeper, testified that she had lad several conversations with Luctgert regarding the disappearance of his wife. She has been regarded as one of the State's strongest witnesses, being one of the few who saw smoke fesuing from the factory the night Mrs. Luctgert disappeared. She swore that Luctgert had arged her not to say anything about the smoke, as it much get him into trouble. Mrs. Tosch detailed how Luctgert had recited his domestic unhappiness and had told her of the contempt with which he regarded his wife. He had, she said, told her that his feelings against his wife were so bitter that he could crush her. She also said that Luctgert on one occasion had told her that he felt like killing himself, and would do so if it were not for leaving his little children.

TILLMAN IN BROOKLYN.

A CHARACTERISTIC HARANGUE BEFORE

A GATHERING OF BRYANITES. Believers in the tenets of the Chicago platform and admirers of William Jennings Bryan were out in force last night at Ridgewood Park to listen to Senator Tillman of South Carolina speak on "The Duty of Democrats." The meeting was directed by United Democratic Clubs of Kings County. Fully two thousand people were present, many women being eager listeners. At times the applause was deafening, but not a few exceptions were taken to the speakers' remarks by people in the audience.

The speaker was introduced by Henry Nichols, president of the organization. Ex-Senator Francis M. Bixby presented resolutions setting forth the alleged need of a loyal Democrat for the position of Judge of the Court of Appeals. The resolutions also reiterated allegiance to the principles of the Chicago platform. They were passed unani-

Mr. Tillman said in part:

Unless the people of this country take their natural affairs in their own hands and have an honest Congress and honesty in State legislation and in municipal affairs, millionaires will soon have this country sharing the fate of other nations and men on horseback will keep you down at the point of a bayanet. We already have government by injunction, irresponsible judges, who have been appointed by corperations, protecting those corporations by unlawful acts. He uses his authority contrary to law and the Constitution, forbidding men to speak together when the Constitution says that the right to assemble and ask for redress of grievances was never to be impaired. The milita has been ready and the United States armies stand ready to march into the coal regions to grasp the strikers by the throat and shoot them like doss. They do these things persuant to tyrannical and unconstitutional orders.

Last year we had an exhibition of true independence, when hundreds of thousands of Republican voters turned from the political faith of their fathers and said. "You are no longer the Republican voters turned from the political faith of their fathers and said. "You are no longer the Republican voters turned from the planting for that grand name." Democrat: they give an exhibition of arrogance that could not very well be duplicated. The devil himself, when he rebelled against God, could never have exhibited more impertinence.

After four years of Cleveland, the Democratic party laid down and covered itself with its sirroud, and if it did not give up the ghost it came so near it that in January of last year there was more who believed that his machine would not control the Democratic convention and declare for the gold standard. But those of use who believe in dependence there then like whitesed curs and that they might refer them like whitesed curs and that they might

The speaker then indulged in one of his characteristic denunciations of Messrs, Hill. Whitney and Flower, and said that the Democrats had fawned before them like whipped curs and that they might probably appeal to them again to be their leaders. He said it was better to go into the fight in November without leaders than with such men, even if defeat resulted.

The enactment of the Dingley tariff was next taken up by the speaker, who said the law could not benefit the workingman, and was plainly in the interest of the millionaire.

GREECE REPLIES TO THE POWERS.

WILLING TO SET APART REVENUES YIELDING 6,000,000 DRACHMAS YEARLY FOR THE INDEMNITY.

Athens, Aug. 31.—The Government has replied to the request of the Powers for a statement of the revenue it will be able to assign as a guarantee for an indemnity loan. It offers to set apart revenues amounting to 6,000,000 drachmas yearly.

The Austrian Government, it is stated, has proposed the rejection of the British plan for the settlement of the Greco-Turkish difficulty, and urges that the five remaining Powers proceed with the conclusion of peace between the two countries.

In the Chamber of Deputies yesterday M. Ralli, the Premier, presented a bill for the retention of a portion of the current crop, declaring that the Government would treat the vote on the question as

The Government, the Premier said, could not state how the peace negotiations between Greece and Turkey stood, but the country must be aware that the conditions proposed were onerous. M. Delyannis said that while the enemy trod on Greek soil there would be dissensions, and that it would be an evil augury for the country for his party to support the Government. M. Levidis, formerly Minister of Marine, who was assaulted in the lobby of the Chamber of Deputies on Saturday by M. Grivas, Chief-of-Staff of the Greek fleet, brought the subject of the attack upon him to the attention of the Chamber, and explained the remarks made by him which led to the assault, whereupon M. Grivas apologized for striking M.
